Italy

Inspiring romanticism and refinement for millenia, Italy's immoderate side can be seen in its televised escapades and its obsession with physical appearance. All the while desire resides in the shadow of the Vatican and the Italian "Mamma". Some of Philippe Desrosiers' questions are uncomfortable, others bring a smile.

00:49 VU DU CIEL PAR YANNICK CHARLES

A view of the world's coastlines, taken from a helicopter, by the top reporter Yannick Charles, a journalist for "Thalassa".

Martinique seen from the sky - Flight over the coast of Martinique

In the low-angled light of early morning the coast slips by, islets and coves lying open to our gaze. Here, Fort de France, a sprawling city, a sort of Naples of the Caribbean. There, Saint-Pierre, wiped off the map by the most deadly volcanic eruption to date. Today the city is rebuilt and cleared of its ashes. Ever since, the Volcanological Observatory set in the heights of the former capital of Martinique keeps watch over Mount Pelée.

The series Les grands explorateurs (the Great Explorers) provides an opportunity to discover how Europe mapped America and the Pacific between the 15th and 18th centuries, through the lives of five legendary seafarers.

Amerigo Vespucci
Among the great explorers who played their part in the discovery of our world, it was Amerigo Vespucci who lent his name to the "New World". While Christopher Columbus spent more than a month travelling around the Caribbean looking for the "West Indies", Amerigo Vespucci was heading along the South American coast. His thrilling saga led to the creation of the initial contours of the map of Brazil as we know it today. This extraordinary story of the discovery of the outlines of the continents includes commentary from Claudie Haigneré, a world renowned astronaut and 21st-century explorer, combined with explanations of the way mapmaking has developed over the centuries from Hélène Richard, Manager of the Bibliothèque Nationale de France's "Maps and Plans" department.

Boubouroche

Boubouroche is one of those rather naive people whose kindness is blatantly abused by others and who become the subject of ridicule once their backs are turned. Boubouroche has a girlfriend, a pretty young widow named Adèle with a strong character, and who doesn't miss a chance to take him for a fool. At 6 PM each day, Boubouroche likes to play cards at the "Trois fiacres" cafe. Every day at 6 PM Adèle places a pot of flowers on the windowsill, to signal to her lover André that the coast is clear. What they don't know however, is that the neighbour has seen it all. As young André refused to help him to carry his heavy parcels, he plans to tell Boubouroche of Adèle's affair. Unable to believe what he's hearing, Boubouroche hurries home to find out for himself.

Three murmured masses

The scene is Christmas, 1864. Timoléon tells his friend Alphonse Daudet an extraordinary but true tale from Provence. It all begins on Christmas Day 1763. Don Balaguère, chaplain to the Marquis de Trinquelage, is in a state of panic. He's supposed to be preparing the living crib, but gets distracted by the Christmas goodies including stuffed turkeys, baked pâté, gingerbread and other culinary delights. Because Don Balaguère is gluttonous and greedy. So greedy in fact that sometimes he forgets his priestly vows. Because of this, he no longer believes in the Devil. After all, everything he eats is so delicious that only the good Lord himself could have sent it. No surprise then, that he doesn't suspect even for a minute that his new sacristan, Garrigou is a message from hell sent to conclude a sinister pact. Each year, God offers Lucifer a soul and this year it's the soul of Don Balaguère, who has been chosen as punishment for his gluttony.

Directed by: Jacques Santamaria, 2009
Screenplay, adaptation and dialogue: Jacques Santamaria, based on a work by Alphonse Daudet
With: Patrick Bosso (Don Balaguère), Guillaume Carcaud (Garrigou), Christian Bujeau (the Marquis de Trinquelage), Marius Colucci (Alphonse Daudet), Xavier Aubert (Timoléon), Sylvie Degryse (the Marquise de Trinquelage) and Pierre Maguelon (Maître Bugasse)
