23:30 J'Y SUIS, J'Y RESTE !

This documentary series offers you a chance to discover some of the outstanding holiday destinations of Quebec and New Brunswick in the words of those who live there.

La Beauce

A place of traditions, la Beauce stands out for the daring and inventive nature of its inhabitants. We meet André Bolduc and his daughter Catherine who tell us about the amazing adventure of their piano parts company, the only firm of its kind in North America and which exports to the whole world. Daniel Carrier, historian, presents the area's master: Chaudière, a capricious river which is well known for flooding its banks. Proud to belong to the "country of the maple tree", two enthusiastic maple producers explain the challenges faced by the sector. Pig breeders reveal their initiatives to respect the environment and preserve their line of work.

Directed by: Marcotte Lisette, 2008.

02:30 FLASH INFO

02:33 CAÏN

The investigations of Police Chief Fred Caïn, cop in a wheelchair, with a strong character and scathing humour, quick to take advantage of his disability to bypass the law and common decency.

Episode 3: Judge and defendant

On the surface, it appears to be an ordinary car accident, involving, admittedly, a very influential man. An investigation that Cain would have liked to avoid, were it not that the investigating judge is particularly alluring, with a forceful personality that appeals to the Chief immediately...

Directed by: Bertrand Arthuys (France, season 1, 2012)
Screenplay: Bertrand Arthuys, Alexis Le Sec
Cast: Bruno Debrandt (captain Caïn), Julie Delarme (lieutenant Lucie Delambre), Frederic Pellegeay (commander Jacques Moretti), Smadi Wolfman (doctor Elizabeth Stunia), Anne Suarez (Gaëlle), Natacha Lindinger (Anna Spiegelman)

It crosses the roof of the world, covering more than 4,000 winding kilometres, 20 mountain chains and two desert plateaus: it is the ancient tea route, which connects China to Europe, via Nepal, India, Persia, Mongolia and Russia...

In the kingdom of green gold

We are in the region of Xishuangbanna, close to the subtropical virgin forests of south west China, northern Vietnam, Laos and Myanmar. This is where the journey through the land of tea begins. First, we see wild tea picking from large camelia sinensis bushes, as well as harvesting of the famous cultivated Pu'er tea. The tea is still prepared and picked and the leaves sorted, fermented and produced as cakes or bricks, for transportation on horse-back, in accordance with ancient traditions. Each ethnic group, and sometimes each family of planters, has its own production secrets, handed down from generation to generation. During and after picking, the caravans prepare for a 4,000 kilometre trek, taking them to Lhasa, the capital of Tibet...

It crosses the roof of the world, covering more than 4,000 winding kilometres, 20 mountain chains and two desert plateaus: it is the ancient tea route, which connects China to Europe, via Nepal, India, Persia, Mongolia and Russia...

In the heart of Shangri-La

The riders meet up to form caravans, some of only a dozen horses and mules, others of up to three hundred animals. Then, loaded with green gold, they cross twenty mountain chains and powerful rivers, including the Yangtze and the Mekong. The villages they pass through, hidden away in the high valleys or clinging to magnificent mountainsides, are often cut off from the world for six months a year. To provide for themselves, the inhabitants have developed crafts which allow them to maintain their independence. Here, nature and its savage beauty are so imposing that a universal spirituality appears to live in human hearts. Buddhism is ever-present and is displayed in a thousand and one temples, stone statues and cult centres. Leaving the verdant regions of mythical Shangri-La and arriving on the steppe at Banda, you are aware of a major change in the route...
