AFTERNOON

12:07 PARIS, UNE HISTOIRE CAPITALE ST

In 4 parts, a history of the French capital from antiquity to the present day.

Paris, royal capital

From the 13th century, Paris underwent an architectural revolution marked by the construction of emblematic monuments. Philippe-Auguste was one of the first sovereigns to be concerned about urban development: he had the streets paved and moved into the Louvre. The construction of Notre-Dame began in 1163, and Sainte-Chapelle in 1242...

A three-part series looking into the situation of endangered animal species.

The condor egg

In 1985, only nine California condors remained alive. This bird of prey, which once numbered in the thousands across the American west and Mexico, was on the verge of extinction. Scientists strove to save the species. Today, the hatching of the 400th condor egg marks the success of their venture.

Tunisia, the secrets of the octopus trappers

The octopus is an important source of income around the Mediterranean. In Tunisia's Kerkennah archipelago, Mohammed Dahmen is one of the last fishermen to use the "gurglet" to catch the octopus. This traditional fishing technique consists of trapping the molluscs in earthenware jugs tied together with a rope.

04:42 VU DU CIEL PAR YANNICK CHARLES

A view of the world's coastlines, taken from a helicopter, by the top reporter Yannick Charles, a journalist for "Thalassa".

Martinique seen from the sky - Flight over the coast of Martinique

In the low-angled light of early morning the coast slips by, islets and coves lying open to our gaze. Here, Fort de France, a sprawling city, a sort of Naples of the Caribbean. There, Saint-Pierre, wiped off the map by the most deadly volcanic eruption to date. Today the city is rebuilt and cleared of its ashes. Ever since, the Volcanological Observatory set in the heights of the former capital of Martinique keeps watch over Mount Pelée.

05:31 SUR LA ROUTE LÉGENDAIRE DU THÉ

It crosses the roof of the world, covering more than 4,000 winding kilometres, 20 mountain chains and two desert plateaus: it is the ancient tea route, which connects China to Europe, via Nepal, India, Persia, Mongolia and Russia...

In the kingdom of green gold

We are in the region of Xishuangbanna, close to the subtropical virgin forests of south west China, northern Vietnam, Laos and Myanmar. This is where the journey through the land of tea begins. First, we see wild tea picking from large camelia sinensis bushes, as well as harvesting of the famous cultivated Pu'er tea. The tea is still prepared and picked and the leaves sorted, fermented and produced as cakes or bricks, for transportation on horse-back, in accordance with ancient traditions. Each ethnic group, and sometimes each family of planters, has its own production secrets, handed down from generation to generation. During and after picking, the caravans prepare for a 4,000 kilometre trek, taking them to Lhasa, the capital of Tibet...
