01:59 SUR LA ROUTE LÉGENDAIRE DU THÉ

It crosses the roof of the world, covering more than 4,000 winding kilometres, 20 mountain chains and two desert plateaus: it is the ancient tea route, which connects China to Europe, via Nepal, India, Persia, Mongolia and Russia...

In the heart of Shangri-La

The riders meet up to form caravans, some of only a dozen horses and mules, others of up to three hundred animals. Then, loaded with green gold, they cross twenty mountain chains and powerful rivers, including the Yangtze and the Mekong. The villages they pass through, hidden away in the high valleys or clinging to magnificent mountainsides, are often cut off from the world for six months a year. To provide for themselves, the inhabitants have developed crafts which allow them to maintain their independence. Here, nature and its savage beauty are so imposing that a universal spirituality appears to live in human hearts. Buddhism is ever-present and is displayed in a thousand and one temples, stone statues and cult centres. Leaving the verdant regions of mythical Shangri-La and arriving on the steppe at Banda, you are aware of a major change in the route...

It crosses the roof of the world, covering more than 4,000 winding kilometres, 20 mountain chains and two desert plateaus: it is the ancient tea route, which connects China to Europe, via Nepal, India, Persia, Mongolia and Russia...

On the roof of the world

Here we are on the route that leads to the roof of the world. And it's only now, on the bare Tibetan plateau that we can see how these adventurers organise themselves to meet the challenges imposed by this long and difficult route. We will taste their food, prepared in makeshift pans blackened by fire, visit caravanserais sheltering for the night and share their rest, most often under the stars. It's a journey that will take twelve months: six months out and another six months back, which certain caravanserai have made more than twenty times in their lives. But, we have arrived in Lhasa, the centre of Buddhism, as well as a trading post between China and India, as well as for all parts of the Himalayas. It's here that the horse trains from Yunnan stop, handing over their cargo of green gold Pu'er tea for carriage to India, Pakistan and other distant countries, to the farthest corners of the world...

Tunisia, the secrets of the octopus trappers

The octopus is an important source of income around the Mediterranean. In Tunisia's Kerkennah archipelago, Mohammed Dahmen is one of the last fishermen to use the "gurglet" to catch the octopus. This traditional fishing technique consists of trapping the molluscs in earthenware jugs tied together with a rope.
